Gene expression is the process by which information from a gene is used in the synthesis of a functional gene product. These products are often proteins, but in non-protein coding genes such as transfer RNA (tRNA) or small nuclear RNA (snRNA) genes, the product is a functional RNA. The process of gene expression is used by all known life "eukaryotes (including multicellular organisms ...

Polyadenylation is the addition of a poly(A) tail to a messenger RNA. The poly(A) tail consists of multiple adenosine monophosphates; in other words, it is a stretch of RNA that has only adenine bases. In eukaryotes, polyadenylation is part of the process that produces mature messenger RNA (mRNA) for translation. It, therefore, forms part of the larger process of gene expression.

R-2HG exhibits broad and variable anti-proliferation effects in leukemia and glioma R-2HG increases global m6A RNA modification in the sensitive cells via targeting FTO. The R-2HG-FTO-m6A axis regulates MYC/CEBPA expression and downstream pathways. The FTO/MYC homeostasis controls the response/sensitivity of leukemia cells to R-2HG

Gene therapy constitutes a therapeutic intervention based on modification of the genetic material of living cells, by correcting genetic defects or overexpressing therapeutic proteins. The success of gene therapy protocols depends on the availability of therapeutically suitable genes, appropriate ...

It is known that more than 70% of mammalian genomes are transcribed, yet the vast majority of transcripts do not code for proteins. Are these noncoding transcripts merely transcriptional noise, or do they serve a biological purpose?
