90 BRAIN METABOLISM AND CEREBRAL BLOOD FLOW ischemic brain damage. A mean systemic blood pressure of 60mmHg, which is satisfactory in the normal individual, may result in a profound fall in CBF, such that ischemic brain damage may occur after only 15–30 minutes.

The book covers models of blood flow and metabolism and how these can be measured using a variety of imaging and non-imaging techniques. It also examines how cerebral blood flow is controlled in response to a wide variety of challenges and how it changes with normal physiological variation and in response to a large number of pathological conditions, including stroke and dementia.

Cerebral blood flow, or perfusion, is a measure of the rate of delivery of arterial blood to a capillary bed in tissue. The standard unit of measurement for CBF is milliliters of blood per 100 g $\hat{=}$ 1 of tissue per minute, and a typical value in the human brain is 60 mL 100g $\hat{=}$ 1 min $\hat{=}$ 1 .

Relationship between cerebral blood flow and cerebral perfusion pressure. In chronic hypertension, the curve is shifted to the right. The brain requires a constant flow of blood over a range of pressures and this is achieved by the process of autoregulation. The stimulus to autoregulation is CPP, not MAP. In Cerebral autoregulation (CA) of cerebral blood flow (CBF) is the process in which the cerebral vasculature maintains a relatively constant blood flow despite changes in perfusion pressure.

The control of cerebral blood flow is complex, and only beginning to be elucidated. Studies have identified three key regulatory paradigms. The first is cerebral pressure autoregulation, which maintains a constant flow in the face of changing cerebral perfusion pressure.
